1. DISCOVER DENVER OVERVIEW

Project Purpose

Discover Denver is a multi-year project intended to develop a comprehensive inventory of Denver's historic and architecturally significant resources. Led by Historic Denver, Inc. in collaboration with the City and County of Denver, this project utilizes advanced technology to accelerate the pace of historic resource survey and improve the consistency of data collection. Project methodology is based on the Multiple Property Documentation Approach and the Historic Context Statement framework developed by the National Park Service.

Denver covers a land area of 154 square miles and contains approximately 160,000 primary buildings. As of the beginning of the survey covered by this report, fewer than 9% of these buildings had been surveyed for historical and architectural significance. In 2016, the City and County of Denver received and approved more than 700 demolition permits. Consequently, Denver is at risk of losing many properties that tell the story of the city's evolution and the people, events, ethnic and cultural heritages, and architectural styles that make Denver a special and interesting place to live.

Recent studies have shown that economic development occurs in historic districts at seven times the rate of other areas. According to The Economic Power of Heritage and Place (The Colorado Historical Foundation, 2011) and Preservation for a Changing Colorado (Colorado Preservation, Inc., 2017), investment in historic resources creates jobs, attracts businesses, and generates income from consumer visitation and spending. The purpose of Discover Denver is to identify those special places in our community where rehabilitation and investment will preserve our city's unique identity and promote quality of life for generations to come.

Project History

Discover Denver is a multi-phase project. The project's methodology was developed and evaluated in two preparatory phases, the Investigative Phase and the Pilot Phase. Phase One, the first non-preparatory phase of Discover Denver, wrapped up at the end of 2017 after documenting the buildings in three of Denver's neighborhoods. Phase Two of Discover Denver began in Spring 2016 and is documenting the buildings in five survey areas, including two downtown commercial corridors. This report covers efforts in the Virginia Village neighborhood, one of those five areas.

Investigative Phase - The initial phase of Discover Denver (2010-2011) focused on developing a methodology and funding plan for the project. During this phase, staff from Historic Denver, Inc., the City and County of Denver, and the Colorado Office of Archaeology and Historic Preservation worked with consultants Winter & Company and an advisory committee comprised of community stakeholders. The report Denver Historic Survey: Citywide Survey Strategy was the result of these efforts.

Recommendations in the report included the use of survey software and methodologies developed by the City of Los Angeles for use in its own citywide survey, SurveyLA.

Pilot Phase – The goal of the Pilot Phase (2012-2015) was to test out recommendations made in the Investigative Phase. To test the proposed methodology, three distinct pilot survey efforts were undertaken. Pilot 1 focused on a post-World War II developer-planned residential subdivision, Harvey Park. Pilot 2 looked at 1920s small homes in two geographically distinct areas, the Berkeley neighborhood in northwest Denver, and the Park Hill neighborhood in east-central Denver. Pilot 3 focused on streetcar commercial districts embedded in two residential neighborhoods, Cole and Globeville. Approximately 3,000 properties were surveyed across these three efforts as a part of the Pilot Phase. An agreement with the City of Los Angeles allowed Discover Denver to use survey software developed for its own citywide survey, SurveyLA. The software was used in Pilot 1 and Pilot 2 of Discover Denver, but by Pilot 3 it was determined not to be a good long-term fit for the project. Costs associated with hardware, and administrative support required by the software, brought into question the scalability of the solution. Field survey efforts ended in Fall 2014, and reporting on the Pilot Phase was completed in Spring 2015. Since the SurveyLA software was not viable for the Discover Denver project, proprietary survey software that runs on inexpensive handheld tablets was developed and used in the subsequent phases of Discover Denver, Phase One and Phase Two.

Phase One - The first non-pilot survey phase of Discover Denver, Phase One, began in Spring 2015 and focused on three Denver neighborhoods. The first neighborhood surveyed, Jefferson Park, is a primarily residential area located just northwest of downtown Denver. The second survey area covered the remainder of the Globeville neighborhood not surveyed in the Pilot Phase. The Elyria-Swansea neighborhood, a large mixed-use neighborhood located along the northern city limits, was the third area surveyed. Field survey efforts ended in Fall 2017, and reporting on Discover Denver Phase One was completed at the end of 2017.

Phase Two - Survey efforts in Phase Two, the most recent phase of Discover Denver, focused on three statistical neighborhoods (Virginia Village, City Park West, and Capitol Hill), as well as sections of two of Denver's major commercial corridors (East 17th Avenue and South Broadway). Because of its proximity to Capitol Hill, the westernmost portion of the Cheesman Park neighborhood was included as a part of the Capitol Hill survey area. Phase Two used largely the same methodology employed in Phase One of Discover Denver. This report covers survey efforts in the Virginia Village neighborhood, and subsequent reports will cover efforts in the other survey areas.

2. INTRODUCTION: VIRGINIA VILLAGE SURVEY

Denver's Virginia Village neighborhood is located in southeast Denver, and bounded roughly by South Colorado Boulevard (west), East Mississippi Avenue (north), Cherry Creek South Drive (northeast), Quebec Street (east), Evans Avenue (south), and the I-25 freeway (southwest). Virginia Village comprises the largest area surveyed in Phase Two of Discover Denver.

The consultant team of Corbett AHS, Inc. and Mead and Hunt were contracted to lead field survey efforts for Phase Two. As with prior Discover Denver surveys, the bulk of the properties were surveyed by trained volunteers, with areas of more complex building types, such as industrial and selected commercial zones, surveyed by Corbett AHS or Mead and Hunt personnel and volunteers selected for expertise in the field of architecture. Field survey in the Virginia Village neighborhood took place between July 2016 and July 2017, with a small number of buildings surveyed in August and December, 2017. Data for a total of 3,497 buildings was collected.

While the Discover Denver survey area included the entire neighborhood, churches and schools were excluded from this survey and will be covered in future citywide thematic surveys. A thirty-four building gated development of single-family homes constructed from 1985 to 1988 was also excluded due to lack of access.

Purpose

The purpose of this project was to survey all buildings within the statistical boundaries of the Virginia Village neighborhood. A hybrid reconnaissance-intensive approach to the survey was taken, where limited information was collected on buildings that were less than thirty years of age or that had major modifications and no longer retained their historic physical integrity. More detailed information was collected on buildings that were greater than thirty years of age and that retained architectural integrity.

See the Research Design and Methods section of this report for more detailed information regarding the survey approach taken by Discover Denver.

Funding

This project was made possible by funding and support from the History Colorado State Historical Fund, the City and County of Denver, and Historic Denver, Inc.

Project Results

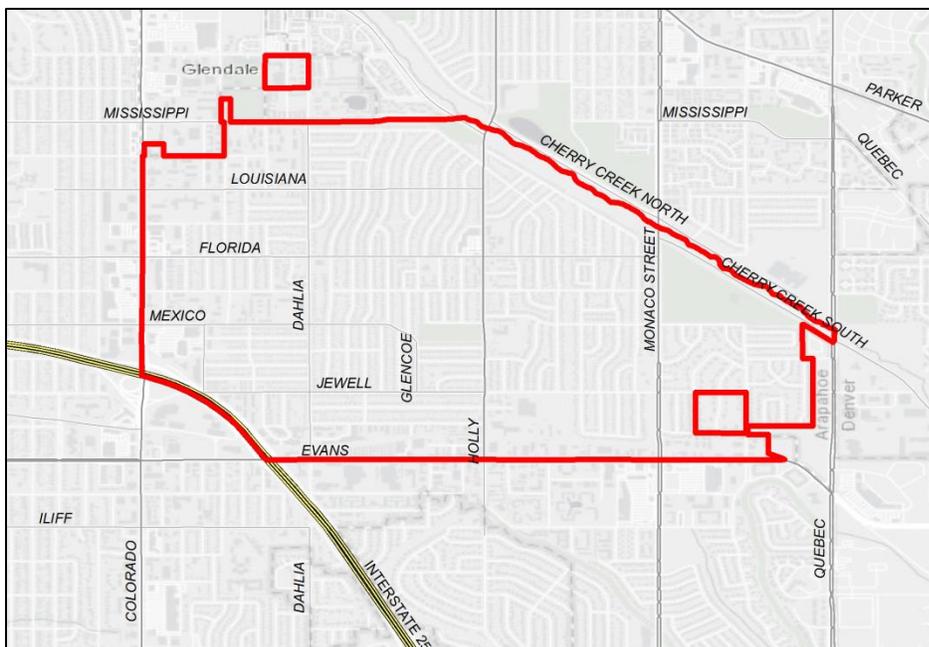

The survey resulted in the documentation of 3,545 properties in the Virginia Village neighborhood. Of that total, 3,298 buildings retained sufficient historic physical integrity to record their full architectural details in the field. 146 buildings no longer retained their historic physical integrity and only basic attributes were collected. Fifty-three buildings were under thirty years of age; these buildings were logged and photographed, but no architectural details were described. Forty-eight vacant parcels were noted in the survey area.

The histories of forty-nine individual buildings were researched as a part of Discover Denver's efforts in Virginia Village. Of these, nine buildings were determined to have potential individual architectural, historical, or cultural significance. Four areas within Virginia Village were identified as having a concentration of buildings with good historic physical integrity and historical or cultural significance.

3. PROJECT AREA

Description

Virginia Village is a statistical neighborhood in the southeast area of the City and County of Denver. It covers an approximately 1300-acre area that is roughly wedge-shaped, measuring about 1.25 miles north to south and 2 miles east to west. A small, discontinuous two-block outlier about .13 miles to the north of the neighborhood boundary is bounded by E. Kentucky Avenue, S. Dahlia Street, S. Cherry Street, and E. Tennessee Avenue. While not included in the previously stated area description, this small outlier was included in the survey area because it is a part of the Virginia Village statistical neighborhood. Virginia Village's west and south boundaries are generally lined by commercial properties, with its west boundary, S. Colorado Boulevard, one of the most well-traveled commercial corridors in the Denver Metro area. The south boundary, E. Evans Avenue, is also a heavily traveled commercial corridor. To the north, boundary streets are (west to east): E. Arizona Avenue to S. Birch Street, then north one block on S. Birch to E. Mississippi Avenue, where it continues north to loop around the Saint Andrew's Seminary property and back to E. Mississippi. E. Mississippi Avenue then continues east as the northern boundary between Virginia Village and Glendale. This boundary of Virginia Village is predominately residential, comprising large apartment complexes and single family residential properties. The boundary turns southeast at the intersection with E. Cherry Creek South Drive, following Cherry Creek on the north side and passing Potenza Park, more single-family residential, and Cook Park on the south side of the road. One-tenth of a mile before the intersection with S. Quebec Street, the boundary cuts south, then cuts back west at E. Asbury to loop around a small square of unincorporated Arapahoe County, before meeting E. Evans Avenue at approximately .10 mi. east of the intersection with Oneida. At this point, it then follows the commercial corridor of E. Evans Avenue as the southern boundary.

Landscapes

The landscapes of Virginia Village are indelibly inscribed with the layers of nearly constant change that has taken place within these boundaries since the end of World War II. A small number of late nineteenth and early twentieth century houses scattered across the neighborhood are what remains of the farms, truck farms, and greenhouse growers that once comprised the economic core of the area. Also sporadically visible are the railroad beds that represent the economic engines that brought this agrarian settlement and the remnants of the irrigation ditches that sprang from it. Following the end of World War II, as developers in the Denver metro area attempted to address the desperate demand for housing, Virginia Village again became fertile ground in another way—to meet this need. The vast majority of property types in Virginia Village are comprised of single family residential properties constructed in the post-World War II period. Incremental changes in housing types can be seen as one moves through the seventy-five subdivisions platted from the early 1890s through the mid-1970s, with the bulk (47) platted in the 1950s.

Aimed at a growing middle class, these housing types are very like those constructed across the United States at this time. Ranch houses predominate, with other common forms like Cape Cods, Split-Levels, and Bi-Levels appearing in the eastern part of the project area, reflecting Virginia Village's eastward-trending chronological development. As is common in post-World War II developments, schools occupy large parcels, often entire blocks. Churches also occupy large parcels. Shopping centers generally lie on the perimeter of the neighborhood and along major streets within, with some commercial along S. Holly from E. Evans north to the E. Florida Avenue intersection. The cultural landscapes vary as one views them through the lenses of use types, and can be generally understood as follows:

Commercial Landscapes

Commercial landscapes in Virginia Village are generally built along the “fast grid” avenues of S. Colorado Boulevard, E. Evans Avenue, S. Holly Street, and E. Florida Avenue. S. Colorado Boulevard is by far the most commercially developed of these, and is lined with retail-oriented shopping centers, fast-casual restaurants, office buildings, and service providers such as hotels, banks, and veterinarians, as well as offices for other professionals. Along E. Evans Avenue, commercial development tends to be similar, although the building stock is older and incidence of adaptive re-use is higher, with younger businesses occupying storefronts and buildings originally constructed for other uses, such as the cannabis shops on E. Evans Avenue, one of which occupies a former bank building. Commercial development along S. Holly and E. Florida is generally concentrated near E. Evans and at the S. Holly/E. Florida intersection and is contained in smaller shopping centers as well as convenience stores and automobile service stations, with scattered office buildings also present. Unlike E. Evans and S. Colorado, S. Holly and E. Florida also contain long stretches of residential development, both multi-family and single-family.

Residential Landscapes: Multi-Family

Multi-family housing is strongly present in Virginia Village, and in most cases these properties—apartment buildings and rowhouses—act as a buffer between the commercial and residential zones. Tall multi-story apartment complexes and rows of two and three-story apartment block buildings date to the post-World War II period and are present near the sites of the commercial zones that were part of Virginia Village's planning in that period, particularly near S. Colorado Boulevard. Later apartment complexes constructed in the late 1960s through the mid-1980s follow a pattern of groups of similar or identical buildings occupying parcels on or nearer the borders of the Virginia Village neighborhood.

Residential Landscapes: Single-Family

The residential streets of Virginia Village are generally quiet, with setbacks sufficient to allow for large front yards shaded by large trees. As was common in post-WWII subdivisions, streets frequently curve to calm traffic. With little infill or residential redevelopment, the blocks are rhythmically repetitive, providing consistency in building heights, form, and materials that invokes the feeling of the post-World War II suburban landscapes. Within filings, the houses also carry similar materials and design elements, and these similarities support the sense of assimilation and commonality that is at the heart of any typical American postwar development and is strongly at play in Virginia Village's subdivisions.

4. RESEARCH DESIGN AND METHODS

Survey Objectives and Scope of Work

The primary objective of this survey was to identify buildings within the Virginia Village neighborhood having architectural, historical, or cultural significance.

A hybrid reconnaissance-intensive approach to the survey was taken. In this approach, buildings were surveyed at one of four levels: Foundation, Descriptive, Evaluation, and Enhanced. Increasing levels of detail were collected based on a building's age, historic physical integrity, and potential for architectural, historical, or cultural significance.

- Foundation Level

At the Foundation level, electronic data regarding physical location, address, year of construction, and use was collected from the City and County of Denver. All properties were surveyed at the Foundation level.

- Descriptive Level:

At the Descriptive level, all buildings thirty years of age or older, regardless of historic physical integrity, were field surveyed. One to three photographs were taken of each building, and limited information, such as architectural style, building type, and level of modification, was collected. Buildings less than 30 years of age were logged and a photograph was taken, but no additional data was collected.

- Evaluation Level:

At the Evaluation Level, detailed information regarding architectural style, building type, architectural features, and setting were collected on buildings greater than thirty years of age that retained their historic physical integrity. Field evaluations were made for each of these buildings based on their potential for individual architectural significance, and on whether they were located in a cluster with other buildings having significance or special interest. Discover Denver survey forms were generated for each of these resources and provided to the State Office of Archaeology and Historic Preservation.

- Enhanced Level:

Historical research was performed on selected buildings having potential architectural, historical, or cultural significance, or that were good representations of the greater building stock of the Virginia Village neighborhood. For each building researched, a Discover Denver Enhanced Survey Form, based on History Colorado's Architectural Inventory Form (1403), was completed. Each property was evaluated in terms of individual significance and significance as a part of a cluster of buildings having architectural, cultural, or historical significance at the National, State, and local levels.

Survey Exclusions

Churches and schools were excluded from this survey and will be covered in future citywide thematic surveys. A thirty-four building gated development of single-family homes constructed from 1985 to 1988 was also excluded due to lack of access.

Project Participants

Discover Denver is a partnership between Historic Denver, Inc. and the City and County of Denver's Community Planning and Development Department. The consultant team of Corbett AHS, Inc. and Mead and Hunt were contracted to lead field survey efforts for Discover Denver Phase Two. Trained community volunteers and interns played a significant role in the project, performing much of the field survey under the supervision of the consultants, and much of the historical research.

File Search and Previous Survey Work

Identification of resources previously surveyed was performed in early Spring 2016. The search revealed that few resources had been documented during previous survey efforts.

In 2013, three buildings were surveyed by Pinyon Environmental, Inc. These include:

Site ID	Address	Surveyor
5DV.11333	4600 E. Asbury Circle	Pinyon Environmental Engineering Resources, Inc.
5DV.11334	4630 E. Asbury Circle	Pinyon Environmental Engineering Resources, Inc.
5DV.11335	4640 E. Asbury Circle	Pinyon Environmental Engineering Resources, Inc.

Currently Designated Resources

No designated resources are located in the Virginia Village survey area.

Public Outreach

Public outreach occurred prior to beginning fieldwork in Spring 2016. Discover Denver staff met with the city council representative for the Virginia Village neighborhood to discuss the survey project and to answer any questions. In September 2016, a presentation about Discover Denver's work in the neighborhood was given to the Virginia Village Neighborhood Association.

Survey Software and Database

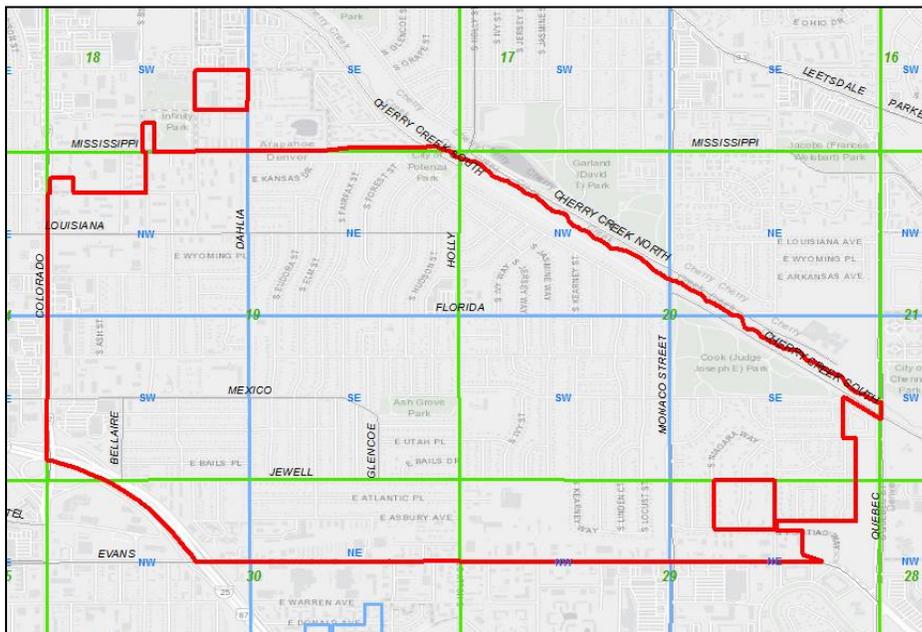

Field survey data was collected on handheld tablets, in proprietary survey software designed for Discover Denver. Survey data collected in the field was stored in a SQL Server database, and used for later reporting. Before survey work began in the Virginia Village neighborhood, the database was pre-populated with parcel data acquired from the City and County of Denver. Pre-populated data included the parcel ID number (PIN), parcel address, and the assessor's year of construction for the primary building on each parcel.

After survey data had been collected on all properties in the Virginia Village survey area, data from the SQL Server database was exported. This survey data was then imported into an Access database to facilitate the generation of survey forms. For properties surveyed at the Enhanced Level, historical background and property evaluation information was joined to the survey data and a Discover Denver Enhanced Survey Form was generated. For all other properties surveyed at the Descriptive or Evaluation level, a Discover Denver Survey Data Form was generated.

Survey Fieldwork

To facilitate organization of the survey, Corbett AHS personnel divided the Virginia Village neighborhood into seven approximately equal areas, following section and quarter-section lines as delineated by the Public Lands Survey System (see maps below). The benefits of this organization method were several. First, it kept daily survey areas within the confines of “fast grid” streets (i.e., those streets fronted by public-use and/or commercial properties), because the more heavily traveled streets tend to follow section and quarter-section lines. This was beneficial for safety reasons, as it minimized the need for crew members to cross busy streets in the course of survey. Second, because the size of the survey was large and the number of buildings to be surveyed was very high relative to other project areas, having shorter-term goals allowed the volunteer crews and other personnel to have an ongoing sense of accomplishment. Third and perhaps most importantly, because building types often shared character defining features within a particular subdivision, and subdivisions rarely cross section or quarter section lines, this allowed the surveyors to understand consistencies in building elements, which helped to increase survey speed.

Map by Corbett AHS, Inc.

Survey fieldwork was performed between July 2016 and July 2017 by groups of trained community volunteers supervised in the field by Corbett AHS, Inc. and/or Mead and Hunt staff. Weather permitting, the volunteers documented buildings three days each week during three-hour shifts. Additionally, a graduate-level historic preservation class from the University of Colorado Denver, as a part of its curriculum, spent a Saturday surveying several blocks within the survey area.

The Discover Denver survey team, November 8, 2016, surveying on S. Eudora St. (L-R, Team leader Dianna Litvak, volunteers Judy Gordon, Ginny Gelbach, and Pat Norris)

Volunteers used Discover Denver survey software to document buildings in the field. This software stepped surveyors through a series of fields containing drop-down lists pre-populated with valid values. If the drop-down list values were not adequate to describe a building, surveyors could also make notes in text fields in the software. GIS-generated maps showing the outlines of parcels and buildings were used by the volunteers to verify addresses and help confirm the existence of hard-to-see accessory buildings. Field survey guides depicting architectural styles and features were used by the volunteers to help correctly document buildings. Staff from the consultant team was on hand for each survey shift to answer questions from both volunteers and neighbors.

Sample survey map for Virginia Village.

As described previously, buildings were documented in the field at three levels—Foundation, Descriptive, and Evaluation—depending on age and integrity. Buildings less than thirty years of age were logged in the software and photographed, but no additional information was collected.

All buildings over thirty years of age, regardless of historic physical integrity, were surveyed at the Descriptive level. Basic information, such as use, architectural style or type, exterior cladding, and level of modification was collected. One to three photographs were also taken of each of these buildings. Surveyors had the option of marking a building as “completely altered,” allowing them to short circuit the survey process. Volunteers were required to get clearance from the consultants before using this option.

For buildings over thirty years of age that retained their historic physical integrity, volunteers logged detailed information in the software. Information documented included architectural style, building type, design elements, building materials, setting, and alterations to the building. Landscape features and accessory buildings were also noted. After each survey shift, Corbett AHS/Mead and Hunt staff reviewed data collected by the volunteers and made required corrections before uploading it to the master database.

Approximately 11,000 photographs were taken for the survey of Virginia Village. A minimum of three (3) photographs of each building was taken by a member of the Corbett AHS / Mead and Hunt team. These consisted of one front facade photograph and two oblique photographs. In many instances, such as corner parcels, more photographs (four to seven) were taken in order to maximize information collected photographically. Photographs were labeled with both address and site ID number.

Historical Research

Historical research was performed on a select number of properties in the Virginia Village survey area. Properties were chosen for historical research based on their potential architectural, cultural, or historical significance, or on the ability of the resource to convey the unique history and architecture of the neighborhood. In several cases, properties were chosen based on anecdotal information provided to Discover Denver by residents of the neighborhood. Graduate students from the University of Colorado class that participated in field survey also researched properties under the guidance of university and Discover Denver staff.

Historical research included the use of Denver assessor records to determine a chain of ownership, and city directories to determine residents or businesses associated with a given property. Resources available in the Denver Public Library's Western History and Genealogy collections were used extensively. These resources included building permits, master property records, historical maps, census records, obituary indexes, and the full series of the Rocky Mountain News and the Denver Post newspapers.

Historical research was used to complete Discover Denver Enhanced Survey Forms, and in evaluation of researched properties for National, State, and local significance.

Challenges Encountered

Prior to its annexation in 1954 by the City and County of Denver, the Virginia Village neighborhood was a part of Arapahoe County. Researching the histories of buildings constructed prior to 1954 proved to be challenging, as early records are located in the Arapahoe County archives, while later records (those after annexation), are found in the City and County of Denver.

5. HISTORICAL OVERVIEW

Virginia Village contains one of the largest concentrations of housing constructed in the post-World War II period in the City and County of Denver. Compared to other post-World War II neighborhoods, it is also one of the most architecturally diverse, with a broad representation of housing types and styles. With approximately 3,300 single family homes and an additional approximately 103 multi-family housing buildings and/or complexes, the cultural landscapes of Virginia Village have, relative to similar neighborhoods, held steady since its development in the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s.¹ Today, most new buildings are multi-family housing or commercial buildings. Compared to other post-World War II Denver subdivisions Virginia Village has had few instances of single-family homes being demolished and replaced, although this has and is occurring.

Pre-World War II Settlement and Industry

Prior to 1950, Virginia Village was a rural area, with few concentrations of housing and little commercial development. Local historian Katherine Chichester, in her 1989 history “A Resident’s View of Virginia Village,” notes that farm settlement in the area dated to Denver’s earliest years, with the Booth Ranch (now the Four Mile Historic Park, located at 750 S. Forest St.) settled in 1864. Although dry farming was the dominant method of agriculture, irrigated farming was introduced in 1883 with the Gonner Lateral Ditch, which served farmers and greenhouse growers in the area until its abandonment in the post-World War II period.²

In 1869, Section 19, Township 4S Range 67W, which comprises most of the western half of Virginia Village, was deeded to the Kansas Pacific Railway, which at that time was building a line west from Kansas City. Although the Kansas Pacific did not run a line through what is now Virginia Village, an 1889 map created by R. R. Salter and published by the H. B. Chamberlin Co., shows that the Denver, Texas and Gulf Railroad ran along the neighborhood’s southern border. The Denver, Texas and Gulf is noted to have acquired the track previously laid by the Colorado and New Orleans Railroad in 1888, providing Denver’s markets and passengers with a linkage to the Gulf Coast.³ Although the rail line is no longer in operation and has not been for many decades, remnant tracks are still visible in linear parcels near Evans between Holly and Dahlia. Also visible on the map is the farm known as Cherry Creek Gardens, at the corner of Mississippi and Dahlia. Cherry Creek Gardens was platted in 1884 by John D. Stewart and the Platte Land Company. This and the smaller plat to the east, Charles B. Wood’s 1887 Denver Gardens, were at that time the only two platted subdivisions entirely contained in what is now Virginia Village.

Two other subdivisions encased the DT&G line, overlapping Virginia Village’s southern boundary. Chamberlin’s University Terrace subdivision was platted in 1887 and 1890 by Humphrey B. Chamberlin, a prominent businessman and real estate developer. Chamberlin came to Colorado for his health in 1880, having established himself as a successful businessman in Brooklyn, New York. Restored by the Colorado climate, he embraced the fertile real estate markets in the young city of Denver and today is best remembered for funding the construction of the University of Denver's Chamberlin Observatory (designed by Robert Roeschlaub and constructed in 1892 at E. Iliff Avenue and S. Milwaukee Street in the University Park Neighborhood).⁴ Immediately adjacent to the east side of University Terrace was Charles B. Wood's 1890 University Addition. Although much less is known about Charles B. Wood, it is notable that in both this and the Denver Garden's plat, Humphrey B. Chamberlin acted as his attorney, indicating the men were business associates.⁵

With a few exceptions, including an 1880s farmhouse in the east area of the neighborhood at E. Jewell and S. Oneida and the Christian Noe farmhouse at the northeast corner of S. Dahlia and E. Florida, most remaining residential development in the Virginia Village boundary that was built prior to the post-World War II period occurred in or adjacent to the plats of Cherry Creek Gardens and Denver Gardens. The 1899 Willits Farm Map shows that, although roads were present—or at least planned—in sections 19 and 20, the majority of the acreage within the modern-day Virginia Village neighborhood boundary was farmland. Although such development drivers as the South Denver Realty and Investment Company and the German National Bank were investing in the area and a few houses from the 1920s and 1930s remain in the southern part of Virginia Village, most of these subdivisions, while platted, remained unbuilt until the post-World War II period.

neighborhoods downtown and enticing them to spend some time on horseback. In 1941, land use, which had previously been unregulated, was codified by the Arapahoe County Commissioners through a zoning plan, which dictated that land use remain agricultural. In 1948, the Commission further regulated the residential use of the area with a zoning policy that restricted individual dwellings to a minimum of 750 square feet in size (limiting the construction of apartment buildings).⁸ Agricultural land use was also reinforced by the logic of the landscape: only one bridge, which was at Colorado Boulevard, crossed Cherry Creek, effectively preventing easy access into the neighborhood from the north.

The Post-World War II Period and U.S. Housing

With the end of World War II, the demand for housing increased nationwide. During the Great Depression of the 1930s and the war years, housing construction had been mostly dormant. In Denver, only 6,000 single-family homes were constructed in the 1930s, and those were mostly in areas where well-to-do residents lived.⁹ Wartime housing was generally understood to be temporary, serving the influx of job-seekers who flocked to urban areas seeking defense-related jobs. But demand was simmering in the national pot: the 1940s saw sharp rises in marriage rates, as service members about to ship out to an uncertain future left new brides to wait for them, some with families already on the way. In 1943, the birth rate in the U.S. was the highest it had been in two decades.¹⁰

Following the war, some 15 million service members returned to civilian life. Families would continue to grow, but the housing starts were woefully insufficient to meet the public's needs. In 1947, as many as six million families were sharing living quarters with family or friends.¹¹ Half a million people lived in buildings that were not originally domestic but that had been repurposed for residential use, such as military Quonset huts, remodeled barns, and repurposed city buses.¹² To help veterans purchase homes, Congress passed the Serviceman's Readjustment Act of 1944, which included the "GI Bill of Rights." This legislation gave returning servicemen access to interest-free mortgages with minimal down payments, as well as free college education. In contrast to the New Deal programs, which placed more emphasis on the government's responsibility to provide the public with decent, affordable housing, Federal programs in the post-WWII period supported the idea that home ownership, accomplished hand-in-hand with private enterprise, was in itself a democratic ideal. Home builders and their allies were especially strongly invested in establishing this as a concept intrinsic to "the American Way of Life." They were also often invested in combating government standards that they deemed restrictive: profit motive in many cases superseded community-based concerns like greenbelts, recreational facilities and sufficient schools.¹³ Covenants and deed restrictions were common tools used by developers to ensure racial homogeneity in the new subdivisions. Although in 1948 the Supreme Court outlawed restrictive covenants, the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) waited two years before it stopped backing mortgages in restricted neighborhoods, and it continued to look the other way concerning racially discriminatory policies for another two decades.¹⁴ Demographer David Rusk has shown that as late as 1970, Denver’s “segregation index” score for the African-American population was 85 (100 = complete segregation of an urban area and 0 = complete integration).¹⁵

The FHA not only restricted lending practices on the basis of race; it also followed decidedly conservative design guidelines, discouraging contemporary designs as unsound investments and favoring the more conservative Ranch, Cape Cod, and Colonial Revival styles that were the postwar developers’ bedrock designs. Even such renowned architects as Frank Lloyd Wright had trouble securing FHA backed mortgages for his Usonian designs.¹⁶ Nevertheless, these far-from-Avant-Garde styles were just fine with the house-hungry public, and to them the repetitive designs symbolized newness and prosperity, the fulfillment of the American Dream.

This complex confluence of factors driven by social need, government regulation, and the engines of free enterprise resulted in the proliferation of post-World War II suburbs, a phenomenon that has been echoed but remains unmatched in the decades subsequent to the post-World War II period. Historian Kenneth Jackson has identified five characteristics of the post-World War II suburb that set it apart from neighborhoods closer to the urban core, such as the earlier streetcar suburbs urban areas.¹⁷ These are:

1. Peripheral location. Urban core areas were unable to support the infill needed to match demand. Areas on the urban periphery, some within city limits and some acquired through annexation, allowed for the growth of communities and the types of homes that Americans felt they had earned through near-constant wartime sacrifice.
2. Low density. Single family housing, with such amenities as wide streets, large lawns, and plenty of automobile space, replaced the rowhouse, apartment block, and other forms of high-density urban housing as the preferred way of living. Lot sizes in the new suburbs were larger, on average nearly twice as large as lot sizes in the earlier streetcar suburbs.
3. Architectural similarity. Methods of standardization in construction, developed to serve the military, were applied by builders to house construction. Tract houses with little variation could be built and sold quickly and at a low cost relative to custom homes and other types of residential construction. Jackson notes that this resulted in the erosion of regional architectural traditions, but that the home-buying public was enamored of the newness of the Ranch, Cape Cod, and other suburban housing styles.
4. Easy availability. FHA-backed mortgages, lower prices, mass production, and—as important—higher wages brought about by post-World War II economic prosperity meant that suburban homes were within reach for those who, before the war, had been frozen out of the housing market.
5. Homogeneity. New suburbanites tended to be young, middle class, and for the most part white. City zoning regulations, the FHA, and the developers saw to it. William Levitt, the New York builder credited with the construction of the first large-scale post-World War II suburb, is quoted as saying, “We can solve a housing problem, or we can solve a racial problem, but we cannot combine the two.”¹⁸

Sullivan Becomes Virginia Village

Virginia Village is, in most ways, a classic case study in post-World War II suburbanization. In Denver, the housing crunch in the years immediately following the war was every bit as bad as it was in the rest of the nation, and this would mean a sea change for the area known as Sullivan. More than 18,000 servicemen had come home to Denver from their military posts by the end of 1945, and 22,000 more were expected.¹⁹ Additionally, more than 14,000 workers were employed locally in defense-related facilities, many of them workers who had come to Denver for the jobs but had decided to stay and make a more permanent home there. Added to them were the military personnel who had been stationed in Denver at one of the several bases and other military facilities, and had chosen Denver as the city to which to return and raise their families. By 1950 the population of Denver County had increased by more than one third, and the metro Denver area as a whole had increased by more than one quarter.²⁰ Available houses were few and prices in some cases had more than doubled.

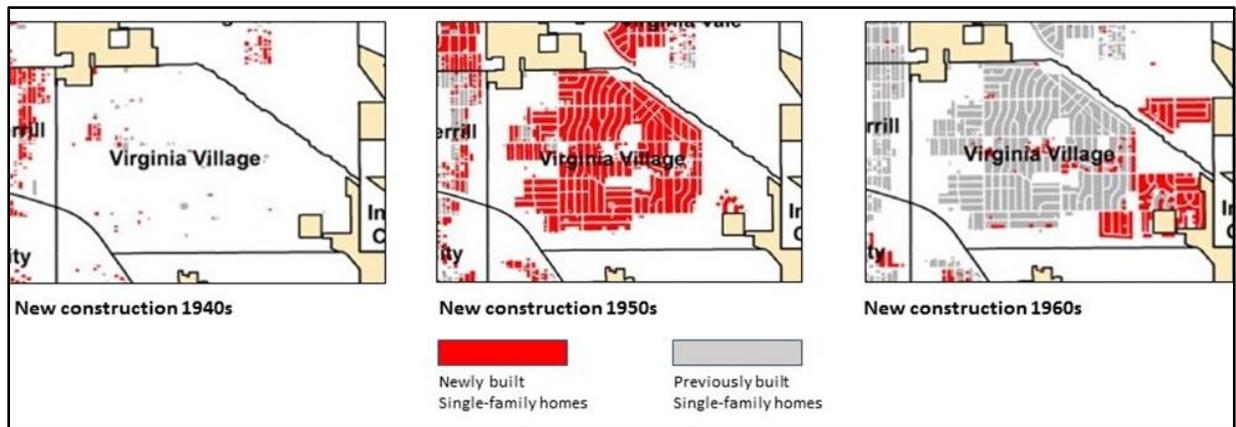

In December of 1945, more than 400 veterans and their families attended a Denver City Council meeting to protest the shortage of affordable housing. Two months later, a study by the State Planning Commission announced that Denver County needed 9,308 new dwelling units.²¹ But it took time for housing starts to begin to catch up with demand. For one thing, materials were often in short supply, as manufacturing had, for the first half of the 1940s, been focused on the war effort. For another, empty parcels upon which to build within the city were few. Denver began the often-contentious process of annexing lands on its periphery, enabling the city to improve roads and infrastructure, providing easier connections from the projected subdivisions to the other parts of the city. But by 1950 the housing business was beginning to boom and would be explosive for the next decade, as can be seen in this map set showing housing construction in Virginia Village from 1940 through 1970.

Denver's Single-Family Homes by Decade

The first filing of Virginia Village was a plat signed by Levi and Winifred Roop in August of 1950. Extending northwest from the intersection of S. Holly and E. Florida, it was a square of land precisely 40 acres in size, or what was in those days the amount of land needed to support a small farm. This was no coincidence: the Roops had been farming it for at least 30 years (they are shown to be “general farmers” as opposed to dairy or truck farmers on the 1930 and 1940 Federal censuses²²), and by 1950 they were in their early seventies and probably ready to retire.²³ Having no intention of becoming homebuilders, the Roops were simply doing what many landowners do when selling property to someone with the intention to develop it. In their case, the developer was the driving force behind Virginia Village: Marcus C. Bogue, Jr.

As evidenced by the name of the Roop’s plat, Bogue was the man with the plan. Virginia was his wife’s name, and Virginia Village was a Bogue family project. The second filing of Virginia Village was filed by Marcus C. Bogue, Jr. and his mother, Darlene Bogue, on the adjacent half-section to the north, less than a month after the Roops filed their plat.²⁴ Bogue was known as an energetic businessman and engineer. Son of a real estate man and a product of Denver, he had grown up immersed in the city’s City Beautiful landscapes. Census records show that his parents raised him in the Congress Park and Country Club neighborhoods, and the family also lived in a house on South Downing Street that faced the gardens of Washington Park. Bogue envisioned a thriving suburban community in Virginia Village, and he was determined to make it one of the best in the area. He platted gently curving streets to calm traffic and make the neighborhood safer for the scores of children he knew would be coming—as many as forty per block.²⁵ And he envisioned a neighborhood shaded from the bright Colorado sunshine, planting or giving away to residents hundreds of maple, hackberry, and ash trees. Bogue commenced construction on the small, Ranch-style homes while it was still an unincorporated rural area of Arapahoe County, meaning that city services, such as sewer lines, were not yet in place. Undaunted, he installed a temporary 9,200 gallon septic tank to serve the new subdivision until the sewer line could be built.²⁶

Bogue and his numerous business associates, many of whom were family members, continued to file subdivision plats on the lands they had purchased in the immediate area. Landowners, who were predominately farmers, may have been older and ready to retire, like the Roops, or Bogue simply offered a price they found appealing. Although he was not the only developer active in Virginia Village, by area he was the most prolific.

In 1951 and 1953, the City of Denver had annexed an area located south of Mexico Avenue and east of Colorado Boulevard. But the residents of Virginia Village, frustrated by the lack of city services, wanted in, too. They petitioned the Denver City Council for annexation on April 7, 1954. On August 18th of that year an ordinance approving the annexation of Bogue's filing and more was signed by the mayor. As is shown in the following map of filings and dates, by 1963 the extent of the current neighborhood boundary had been annexed. Virginia Village was part of Denver.

While most of the homes built by Bogue and his associates were shingle-clad and fall into the Transitional Ranch category, Virginia Village Filing 4, south of Florida, features brick homes that, while still Ranches, were slightly larger and more expensive. Filing 3 contained some two-story homes with garden levels. Prices in the various filings ranged from a very friendly $7,500 to around $15,000, depending on lot size and square footage.

Bogue made sure the new owners of the homes he built had the knowledge they needed to maintain their homes. He provided them with a user's manual of sorts entitled "Important Information about the care of your new home in Virginia Village." It contained sixteen pages of helpful advice covering every aspect of the home from window operation to what types of cleaners to use on kitchen cabinets. It also mentioned, but did not include, the list of restrictive covenants for the Virginia Village subdivision.²⁷

Other common rules listed in postwar suburban covenants were restrictions on using homes as rental properties.

Mid-Century Modern Comes to Virginia Village

Bogue was far from the only developer to leave his imprint on Virginia Village. From 1951 to 1957, Don Vestal of Vestal Builders platted no fewer than nine filings of his Sunset Terrace development north of Jewell between S. Bellaire and S. Holly.²⁸ Vestal's designs were close kin to Bogue's: classic examples of the Ranch form and style as it was being produced on a mass scale in suburbs across the country. But not all developers were interested in sticking with this program; Hiram B. Wolff left an indelible imprint on the landscape of Virginia Village by daring to embrace the Contemporary style, or as it is more popularly known, "Mid-Century Modern."

Called "H. B." by those who knew him, Wolff and his son Brad are best remembered for developing the subdivision of Krisana Park, named for Christian and Anna Noe (Kris+Ana), the Danish dairy farmers upon whose land the subdivision would be built, beginning in 1953.²⁹ The first filing of Lynwood came soon after, in 1955. Both of these are enclaves of Contemporary style homes that are nowadays considered some of the most desirable properties in the Virginia Village neighborhood, along with other concentrations of Contemporary style homes such as the El Rancho subdivision on South Dexter Way (1959) and the Andrews (Filings 1 and 2) subdivisions at S. Cherry Street and E. Idaho Place (1955-56).³⁰ Although the Wolffs also built in more traditional styles, particularly in the later Lynwood filings on the south side of Jewell near Monaco Parkway, it was their fascination with the developments of modernist homes then underway in Palo Alto and Marin, California, that led them to add the more avant-garde design choice to the smorgasbord of homes underway in Virginia Village.

Brad Wolff had visited such a development in California in the early 1950s. The builder, Joseph Eichler, is now a household name among consumers and aficionados of mid-century modern housing. Eichler was inspired by time spent as a renter in the Bazett House (1939), designed by Frank Lloyd Wright in Hillsborough, south of San Francisco. At the time a relative newcomer to California, Eichler is said to have loved the Bazett House so much that he resisted moving out even after the house sold to a new owner.³¹ Certainly, Eichler's affection for Wright's designs at mid-century is evident in the homes that populate the Eichler subdivisions and, in turn, the Wolffs' Krisana Park and Lynwood First Filing. Brad Wolff is said to have admitted that the Wolffs' architect, Frenchie Gratts of the Denver firm of Gratts and Warner, closely followed the Eichler Homes designs, which were the work of California architects Anshen and Allen and the architect A. Quincy Jones.³²

Jones, who was raised in southern California and attended the University of Washington, was strongly influenced by the Japanese aesthetic, as well as the work of Richard Neutra and R. M. Schindler.³³ The low, wide reach of the gable roof, which seems to hover over the house, the extremely deep eaves, the privacy-enforcing front facades and nature-embracing fully glazed rear walls of the Eichler homes can be clearly seen in Gratts' designs for Krisana Park.

In addition, the post-and-beam A-Frames in the Lynwood First Filing can also be seen to share an architectural kinship with Jones' 1956-57 A-Frame designs for the Hallberg Homes in Portland, Oregon, and which are also evident in architect Claude Oakland's A-Frame designs in the later years of Eichler's tenure as a developer.³⁴ However, unlike the earlier Eichler designs, little evidence exists to show that Gratts was copying or even emulating Jones' design, as the homes were constructed at approximately the same time. The recent historic context of A-frame buildings in Boulder County, Colorado, by Jennifer Wahlers and Dianna Litvak defines the A-frame as "...a building with a steeply pitched, symmetrical roof truss system that accounts for at least one-third of the main living story wall." By this definition, Quincy Jones' and Claude Oakland's designs are not technically A-frames, although Gratts' design meets the criteria. However, Wahlers and Litvak discuss the Jones, Oakland, and Gratts A-frame houses as A-frames in the same related context that they are presented here, and other architectural scholarship often refers to the Jones and Oakland designs as A-frames.³⁵

The 1960s: Cook Park

In the 1960s, single-family housing in Virginia Village continued its eastward march. The Cook Park neighborhood, which comprises much of the eastern half of Virginia Village, is so-called because it contains the triangular Cook Park, a large city park along the east side of Monaco Street north of Mexico Avenue. The park is named for Judge Joseph E. Cook, a notable district court judge in Denver in the post-World War II period.

The patchwork of subdivisions in Cook Park reflect the work of several developers, but dominant among them is H.B. Wolff, who continued to plat further filings of the Lynwood subdivision, although he mostly eschewed the modernist design aesthetic he had embraced in the 1950s. Wolff's 1960s homes were larger than the modernist homes in Krisana Park and Lynwood Filing 1. They were also more traditional, including such styles and types as Cape Cod, Colonial Revival, and Ranch. These houses reflected the preference on the part of the home-buying public for larger homes, and they made sense: the couples who had purchased the small Ranch dwellings in Marcus Bogue's early filings of Virginia Village had growing families, and the small children were now teens and pre-teens. With continued development came better connections as well, and Monaco and Holly now crossed Cherry Creek, offering better access to schools and the commercial zones north of Cherry Creek.³⁶

The Commercial Strips: Colorado Boulevard and Evans Avenue

A by-product of the automobile suburb is the “fast grid,” the arterial streets that connect the suburb to the rest of the city. In the years before the construction of the freeway system in Denver, wide and heavily traveled boulevards provided suburban residents with fast and efficient routes to downtown, north Denver, and west Denver. South Colorado Boulevard and East Evans Avenue, bordering Virginia Village on the west and south, respectively, are the two primary commercial strips that attach the neighborhood to the city around it, in contrast to the north/northwestern border, Cherry Creek, which is an effective topographical barrier.

Colorado Boulevard, as a north-south artery that runs the full length of Denver, has a variety of landscapes, from City Beautiful housing to towering apartment blocks to the more serene City Park. The southern stretch that connects Virginia Village to its neighbor to the south, University Hills, and its neighbor to the north, Glendale, has its own character, one born of the tight crush of nearly unfettered commerce that took place in the post-World War II period. Today, little remains that connects Colorado Boulevard to that period, as one business replaced another, over and over, and the buildings they occupied were continually remodeled and replaced. A 1975 article by Gene Amole in The Denver Magazine described it thus:

South Colorado Boulevard was the main thoroughfare to and from downtown Denver. Everybody worked in town, the young men in charcoal-grey suits formed car pools to get downtown and their wives stayed at home and waited for the babies to come ... It wasn't long until merchants and developers were fighting for South Colorado Boulevard frontage. The traffic along Colorado became still heavier. When the Valley Highway [aka Interstate Highway 25] finally pushed through, some people thought that would take the pressure off the boulevard. But it didn't. It seemed to make it worse. There were shopettes jammed up against shopettes.³⁷

Many motorists traversing Colorado Boulevard and East Evans today might still recognize the heavy traffic described by Amole, and the commercial landscapes are just as dense as they were in 1975. Amole describes the attempt by the City and RTD to aid the traffic situation with an ‘Automated Rapid Transit’ system, which was opposed by many of the people in the area, particularly those who lived in the Hilltop neighborhood, who feared its effect on their property values.³⁸ It was not until the early 1980s that RTD again proposed a rail transit corridor for the southeast Denver, and that idea would take another two and half decades to come to pass.³⁹

The 1970s and Beyond

By the early 1970s, Virginia Village (including Cook Park) was undergoing change. Increasingly, original residents were leaving the area and converting their “starter homes” to income properties, resulting in a less stable demographic. Local businesses gave way to chain establishments and, in some cases, businesses such as taverns, which the longtime residents found less desirable.⁴⁰

The 1960s and early 1970s also saw an increase in the construction of multi-family housing in the form of apartment buildings and complexes in the zone between S. Colorado Boulevard and S. Dahlia Street. While smaller apartment buildings had been constructed in or near the commercial zones since the 1950s, the 1960s and 1970s examples were much larger in scale. Generally, these carried style elements, such as mansard roofs and neo-Tudor wall treatments, that set them apart from the neighboring post-World War II modern apartment buildings. One notable and architecturally significant exception is the five-building tower complex known as the Fine Arts Quarter. These nine- and ten-story towers were constructed from 1968 to 1972 between E. Mexico and E. Iowa avenues along S. Birch Street, and were designed by the architect Roland Wilson, whose work set a new standard for apartment design in the late post-World War II period.

⁴⁰ Chichester 1989.

Wilson's work had an enormous impact on the Denver skyline in the post-World War II period and the years of the 1970s oil boom, as tall apartment buildings were constructed in response to increasing demand in housing. Wilson's work can be seen in many areas of Denver, including Capitol Hill and the University of Denver area. Wilson was one of the first apartment designers to incorporate indoor swimming pools and underground parking garages into his designs.⁴¹ His signature innovation was the rhythmic white-paneled balconies that are character defining on the buildings in the Fine Arts Quarter, which he named to evoke appreciation of the arts (i.e., the Korsakov, the DeMedici, the DaVinci, the Van Dyke, and the Monmartre). Born in Denver on August 1, 1926, Wilson was a graduate of East High School and later earned his architecture degree at the University of Denver, where he would have studied with the Austro-Hungarian architect Eugene Sternberg, whose mastery of modernism was to contribute greatly to Denver's post-World War II cityscape.⁴² Wilson collaborated with his wife, Virginia Wilson, who was responsible for the interior design of the buildings. Unlike many architects, Wilson liked to have control of the entire process with his buildings; he often "found the land, bought it, brought in investors, designed the building and often retained ownership" of the properties.⁴³

The Denver Planning Board recognized this reality, and on December 19, 1973, approved a neighborhood plan for Virginia Village, noting problems in circulation and environment, and noting the shift away from single-family residential housing to commercial construction and multi-family housing. The plan outlined a number of solutions, such as increased single-family housing, additional parks and bike paths, including a bike path along the former rail corridor following East Evans Avenue, and de-emphasizing traffic on South Holly and South Monaco.⁴⁴

Although in some cases the recommendations were not implemented, those that were enabled Virginia Village to stabilize. In 1989, when she wrote the neighborhood history, Katherine Chichester concluded: "Virginia Village today is a quiet, moderately integrated neighborhood where people are once again raising families and going about the business of being good neighbors."⁴⁵

6. RESULTS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Summary

3,545 parcels were surveyed in the Virginia Village neighborhood, with the vast majority being single-family dwellings. Vacant parcels and buildings less than thirty years of age were surveyed at the Foundation level, while more information was gathered on those buildings that were over thirty years of age. Because of the relatively good historic physical integrity of most of the buildings in the survey area, the majority (92%) were surveyed at the Evaluation level. Forty-nine individual buildings were surveyed at the Enhanced level, and were evaluated for historical, architectural, or cultural significance. Four areas were identified as having a concentration of buildings with architectural, cultural, or historical interest.

Survey Levels

The following table provides a breakdown of the survey level at which properties were documented in the Virginia Village neighborhood. Parcels surveyed at the Foundation level are those that contain buildings less than thirty years of age or no buildings at all. Buildings surveyed at the Descriptive survey level were over thirty years of age but had major alterations. Those surveyed at the Evaluation level were over 30 years of age and were unaltered or had alterations that were considered minor. Buildings surveyed at the Enhanced level had their history researched and were evaluated for historical or cultural significance.

Building Forms and Styles

Property types in Virginia Village are grouped into three “umbrella” development categories: single-family residential; multi-family or institutional residential; and commercial or governmental. These are found grouped together into zones that roughly define the west and south borders of the neighborhood, with a small node of commercial and multi-family residential in the center of the neighborhood where E. Florida Avenue and S. Holly Street intersect. As can be seen in this map, multi-family/institutional residences provide a “buffer” between the commercial and single-family residential. Very little infiltration across these zones occurs in Virginia Village; however, within each category a broad range of types exist.

The following building types were observed within the Virginia Village boundary. Most were present in sufficient quantity that they could be identified as a type characteristic of Virginia Village. In cases where a building is unique and discussed below, it was found to be geographically significant (i.e., a building locally understood to be a visual landmark) or architecturally significant (i.e., a rare or unique form or type).

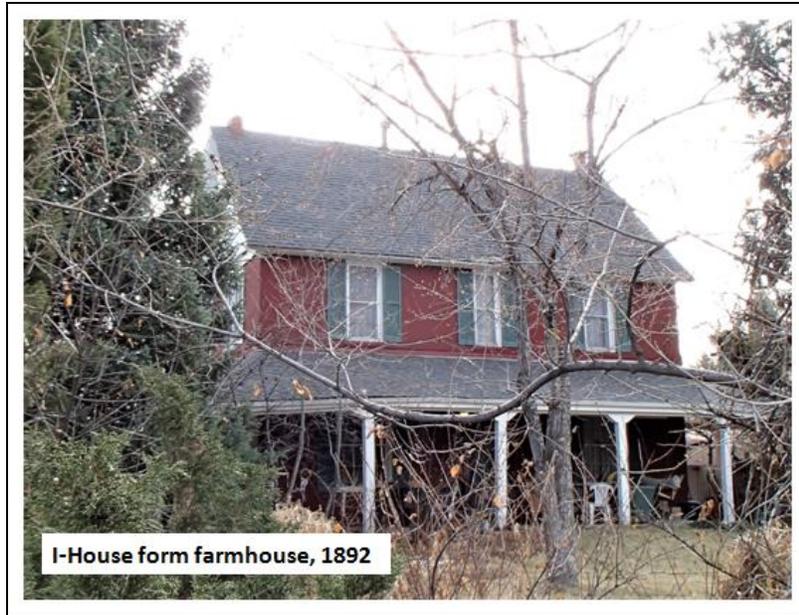

Building Styles and Forms: Single-Family Residential

Single family homes are the dominant building type in Virginia Village, representing approximately 3,262 of the approximately 3,497 buildings surveyed. Thirty-four single family houses in a walled community with posted “No Trespassing” signs were excluded from survey. The vast majority (88.4%) of these—approximately 2,885 homes—date to the post-World War II period (defined here as 1945 to 1965). Fifty homes were constructed prior to the post-World War II period and reflect the typical styles and types constructed across the nation in those years. Houses dating to the late modern period (1966 to 1979) numbered 279, and another thirty-four date to the early 1980s (i.e., 1980 through 1985). In addition, fourteen houses were less than thirty years of age.

Alterations to single family homes ran a wide gamut, and the type of alteration was not focused on any specific type or style. Most common were window and siding replacements. Steel frame casement windows were very commonly replaced with sliding sash vinyl, as that type of window could be easily made to fit the space. Original wood siding was often replaced with aluminum or, later, vinyl siding. Asbestos shingle siding was usually original, but was sometimes an alteration when it was nailed over horizontal wood siding. Landscape features, while not commonly considered in assessing a building’s historic physical integrity, were noted. Most frequent alterations observed in this category were fence replacements and the replacement of original ribbon driveways with full concrete driveways.

Farmhouses and Early Homes: 1892 to 1918

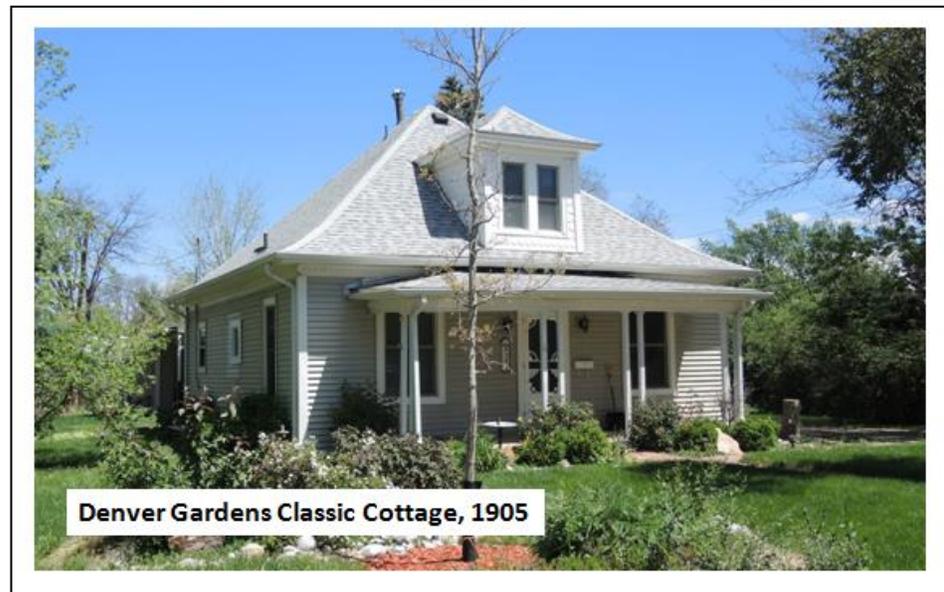

These houses, while rare in Virginia Village, represent the early settlement of the area. Most were farmhouses and occupy parcels close to section or quarter-section lines. Although several are scattered across Virginia Village, many more were doubtless razed to make room for the post-World War II housing stock. Of those that remain, no single style is dominant, but most can be understood to fall into vernacular categories, generally the front-gable form or side-gabled bungalows with Craftsman style or stylistic influence. As isolates, these houses are not discussed as property types for Virginia Village, but notable examples are as follows.

The oldest remaining house in Virginia Village, located at the corner of E. Jewell Avenue and S. Oneida Street, was constructed in 1892 and is the only example of the I-House form in the neighborhood.

Rarities are also represented in a concentration of older houses scattered along E. Iowa Avenue in the area once known as Denver Gardens. These include a 1905 wood-frame Classic Cottage, which is a very rare type in Denver, as most Classic Cottage homes were constructed of brick as mandated by a city ordinance that was in place at the time of their construction (Denver Gardens was part of Arapahoe County in 1905).

A 1905 wood-frame Classic Cottage in the Denver Gardens area of Virginia Village.

Interwar Forms and Styles: 1918 to 1944

Between the end of World War I in 1918 and the onset of World War II, new house construction in the Virginia Village area was minimal. A smattering of pre-1930s houses are found throughout the area, and were generally farm houses, such as the 1918 Craftsman bungalow that served as the farmhouse for the Christian Noe dairy farm. Craftsman bungalows continued to be represented in Virginia Village well into the 1920s. Among the older homes in the former Denver Gardens area is a 1929 brick Craftsman bungalow.

Bungalow Form

Common elements of the Bungalow form include:

- Side or cross-gabled roof. Clipped gables are often present.
- Deep, open eaves with exposed rafter tails and knee braces
- Full-width front porch with pier supports
- Patterned brick in multiple colors

Minimal Traditional Form

Minimal Traditional type houses were constructed with newly available Federal Housing Authority loans during the Great Depression, and were also constructed as worker housing in the years immediately prior to and during World War II. In the late 1940s, Minimal Traditional houses were popular because they could be quickly constructed in large numbers to meet the postwar housing demand.⁴⁶ Virginia Village contains a small sample of Minimal Traditional single-family houses. These are located in the 1400 blocks of S. Birch and S. Clermont, and along E. Florida between S. Bellaire and S. Clermont. Most were constructed in 1939 and 1940.

⁴⁶ McAlester 2015:588-589.

Common elements of the Minimal Traditional form include:

- Wood frame construction
- Low or medium pitch roofs
- Cross-gabled or side-gabled roof. Hipped roofs are also found on Minimal Traditional houses, but were not observed in Virginia Village.
- Single story in height
- Shallow or no eaves
- Double-hung windows, generally 1/1 or with divided lights

Post-World War II Forms and Styles: 1945 to 1965

Ranch Form and Style

Listed in the OAHF Field Guide as both a form and a style, the Ranch house was nearly ubiquitous in the postwar period, comprising 70% of newly built homes from 1945 to 1970.⁴⁷ Virginia Village has an extraordinarily high number of Ranch houses with a wide variation of design elements within subtypes. To some extent, these can be categorized chronologically.

Transitional Ranch - These are found in Virginia Village's early postwar filings, and construction dates generally range from about 1947 to 1952, although some later filings have Ranch homes that seem every bit as minimal as the earlier Minimal Traditional houses. The architectural historian Virginia McAlester notes, in A Field Guide to American Houses, that "The line between Minimal Traditional and Ranchette is a matter of judgment."⁴⁸ In Virginia Village, Transitional Ranch homes are usually located in the earlier filings, but tend to carry features that depart from the Minimal Traditional and are found in Ranch houses, such as large front-façade windows. Attached garages are often present, but are less universal than on later Ranch style houses.

⁴⁷ Timberg 2005.

⁴⁸ McAlester 2015:602.

Common elements of Transitional Ranch houses include:

- Single story
- Shallow or no eaves
- Side gabled or hipped roof
- Tripartite window with large center pane (forerunners to the picture window).

Ranch - The Ranch house is the most typical of the housing types in Virginia Village. Construction dates on these houses range from about 1950 to the late 1960s; McAlester gives the date range for this house type nationally as 1935 to 1975.⁴⁹ Ranch houses are present in nearly all Virginia Village filings and have numerous design variations. Architectural historian Thomas Hubka has noted that Ranch houses are uniformly organized into a 3-zone plan: Automobile space (i.e., attached garage), living space, and sleeping space.⁵⁰ One general trend observed in Virginia Village is the expansion of the attached garage, from one-car to two-car, in the late 1950s, although this is not a fast rule; some of the earlier Ranch homes constructed in the early 1950s for more affluent consumers feature two-car garages, and some mid-1950s subdivisions had Ranch houses without attached garages at all. By about 1960, however, two-car garages were common on Ranch homes, and other style elements, such as those listed below, were also common as builders attempted to offer buyers more personalized versions.

⁵⁰ Hubka 1995:34.

Rectangular plan, hipped roof Ranch, 1955

L-plan gabled roof Ranch, 1966

Common elements of Ranch houses include:

- Single story
- Elongated rectangular or L-plan
- Deep eaves
- Side/cross-gabled or hipped/cross-hipped low-pitched roof
- Tripartite window with large center pane (forerunner to the picture window) or picture window.
- Attached garage (single or two-car)
- Wood frame with brick veneer or brick/horizontal siding combination.

Split-Level Form

The Split-Level form was common in the late 1950s in housing developments across the country. It often contains elements of the Ranch style, with an attached garage and picture window, as well as a low-slope gabled roof and deep eaves. In Virginia Village, Split-Levels are also found with Contemporary style features.

Split Level, 1962

Common elements of the Split-Level include:

- A two-story mass connected on the side elevation to a single-story mass.
- Attached garage on the lowest level.
- Low-sloped gable or hipped roof.

Bi-Level Form

The Bi-Level form is a variant of the Split-Level, with a front façade entry foyer straddling the upper and lower floors. This form was generally found in the Cook Park area of Virginia Village, although multiple examples of a Contemporary style variant were constructed by Marcus Bogue on S. Jasmine Street north of E. Florida Avenue in 1955; and a few years later in 1961, H. B. Wolff used it in Lynwood Filing 3, east of S. Monaco Parkway. In both cases, the Contemporary style was applied.

Later examples of the Bi-Level form use more traditional stylistic elements, such as Ranch or Colonial Revival, with hipped or side-gabled roofs and generally symmetrical fenestration. A kinship in front-façade symmetry and fenestration with the two-story Colonial Revival variant can be seen.

Character defining features of the Bi-Level house include:

- Attached garage or carport
- Two stories in height
- Main entry straddles upper and lower floor

Two-Story Colonial Revival

The Two-Story Colonial Revival type carries a clear, two-level massing that hearkens to the more traditional Bi-Level form described above, but with the main entry instead on the same level as the other ground-floor rooms. Earlier examples carry a symmetrical fenestration and were constructed in the Lynwood filings 3, 4, and 5 from 1960 through 1962. The Mor-Park Manor subdivision, just south of Cook Park, carries a number of “Garrison Front” (second-story overhang) examples constructed in the late 1960s. Unaltered examples of this type exhibit elements of the Colonial Revival style—in Lynwood, full-height shutters flanking the front door appear to be original and part of this stylistic application—but in many cases alterations have obscured clear stylistic applications. The architectural historian Thomas Hubka notes this house type, in his recent work on architectural nomenclature and classification, as one that, while categorizable as a twentieth-century Colonial Revival style house, exists outside of the terminology commonly used to identify domestic housing types.⁵¹

Two-story Colonial Revival, 1960. Lynwood Filing 4

Two-story Colonial Revival, 1968. Mor-Park Manor

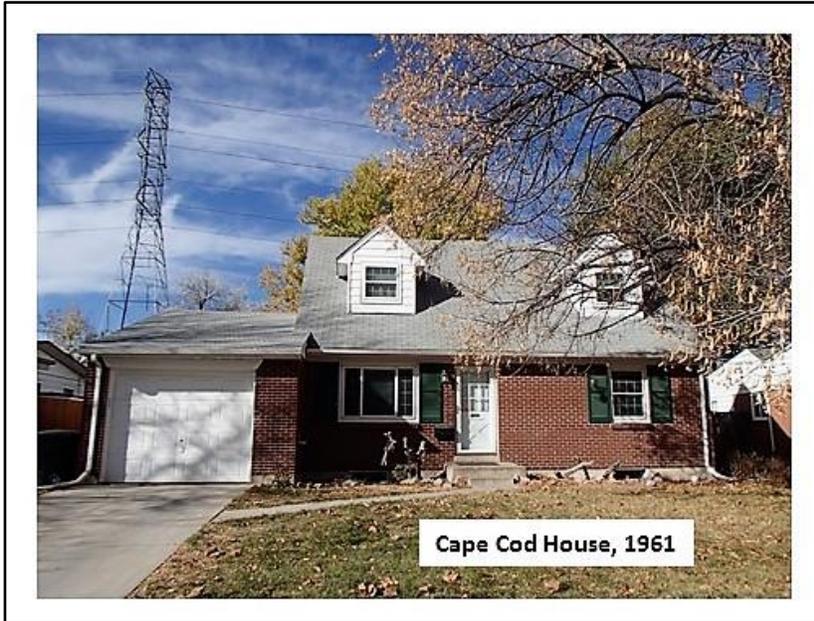

Common elements of the Two-Story Colonial Revival type include:

- Two stories in height
- Side-gabled roof
- Attached front-facing garage
- Partial-width projecting porch
- Porch roof is a continuous extension of the garage roof
- Symmetrical façade
- Window shutters
- Exterior brick chimney on side
- Garrison front (aka second-story overhang)

⁵¹ Hubka, Thomas. 2013:18-19.

Cape Cod Form

The Cape Cod house type was not constructed in the Virginia Village neighborhood until 1960, although in other parts of the United States it was built much earlier, and is often held up as the quintessential post-World War II suburban house form.⁵² It is seen most frequently in Lynwood filings 3, 4, and 5.

Common elements of the Cape Code form in Virginia Village include:

- Attached garage
- Steeply sloped side-gabled roof
- Twin gable dormers on front façade
- Low stoop main entrance

Contemporary Style

Throughout Virginia Village are concentrations of Contemporary style homes. The best known of these are in Krisana Park and Lynwood Filing 1, but the Contemporary (aka Mid-Century Modern) style was used in other developments and by other developers as well. Within this style vocabulary we see four style groups:

Subtype: Contemporary Ranch - The Contemporary Ranch adapts many features commonly seen in the more traditional Ranch house, such as deep eaves and attached garage or carport, to a more modernist stylistic application. These elements may include clerestory windows, a prominent exterior chimney, slot windows, and visible roof elements (rafters, ridge beams, purlins). In Virginia Village, the Contemporary Ranch is the backbone of the Krisana Park neighborhood and is also strongly present in other subdivisions as well. The example shown is in the Lynwood Filing 3 subdivision.

⁵² Hayden 2003:133; Jackson 1985:235. The Cape Cod style suburban house was mass produced by William Levitt in his 1947 Levittown development in Nassau, NY, which is considered to be the first of the large-scale post-World War II suburbs.

Common elements of the Contemporary Ranch include:

- Asymmetrical massing
- Very low-slope roof with deep, open eaves. A ridge beam and purlins are often visible.
- Clerestory windows and slot windows in ribbon configurations are common.
- Attached garage or carport
- Main entrance faces to the side and is set back from the front façade
- Large brick or concrete block chimney

Subtype: A-Frame - Although one example is found in Krisana Park, the modern A-Frame is a signature style in the Wolffs' Lynwood Filing 1 subdivision. These were constructed in 1956-57, and were an attempt to incorporate a "Mountain Chalet" aesthetic into the Contemporary style. Although not always visible from the street, the post-and-beam construction is clearly seen where the roof beams of the A-Frame anchor to the ground, continuing the diagonal slope of the roof. Another chalet-like element is the "weep" or extruded mortar technique employed in the brick chimneys. Unaltered examples have a breezeway between the house and garage, but most of these houses have been altered and the breezeway has been enclosed.

Common elements of the A-Frame include:

- Steeply pitched gable roof on the main mass of the building, with walls not exceeding two-thirds of the roof height at the gable peak
- Exposed beams
- Prominent exterior chimney, often with “weep” mortar
- Clerestory windows at the gable peak
- Garage attached by a breezeway
- Main entrance located in breezeway

Building Styles and Forms: Multi-Family Residential

Virginia Village contains zones of apartment buildings and complexes, as well as numerous examples of single-story rowhouses. Most of these zones are located on the west and north perimeter of the neighborhood, near S. Colorado Boulevard. A few isolated examples are found on or near E. Evans Avenue in the southern periphery of the neighborhood. Additionally, a few examples of group-type housing (i.e., senior care and rehabilitation facilities) are found in Virginia Village, although these have little in common architecturally and do not comprise a type category.

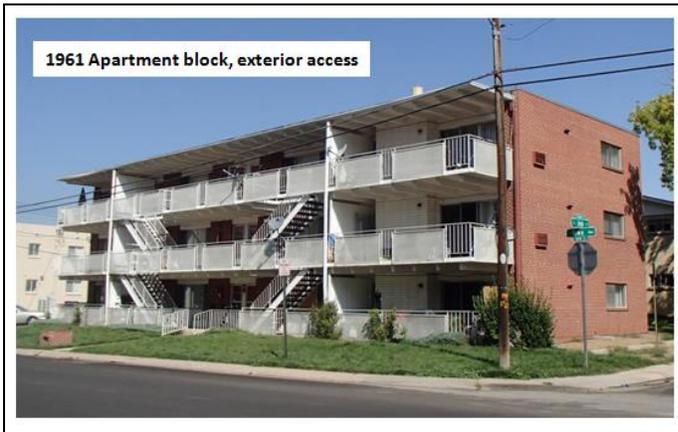

Style applications vary in the multi-family housing. Numerous styles have been applied to apartment complexes, for instance. In the 1950s and early 1960s, builders generally chose Modern style vocabularies for apartment housing. Later, from the late 1960s into the 1980s, builders deliberately moved away from the “machine for living” apartment aesthetic associated with Modern movements. Instead, they tried to make these mammoth buildings seem cozy by applying “historical” referents like Mansard roofs, which de-emphasized height, or randomly projecting brick and false half-timbering, to emulate medieval clinker brick. In some cases Shed style elements in apartment buildings in Virginia Village demonstrate the postmodern influence of iconic 1960s architecture by Joseph Esherick, Charles Moore, and Donlyn Lyndon at Sea Ranch in California.⁵³

⁵³ Many sources discuss Sea Ranch and the architects who broke new aesthetic ground there. A good collection of photographs is available at the blog Modern Architecture by Darrin Bradley, <http://modernistarchitecture.blogspot.com/2016/06/the-sea-ranch-paradox-or-how-one-of-my.html>.

Apartment Block Form

In Virginia Village, apartment blocks are found as single buildings and in complexes of two to five buildings. The apartment block form is generally a simple rectangular or L-plan building that is three to five stories (and sometime more) in height. Apartment block buildings generally fall into two categories: Exterior Entrance (also called “side stair”), in which each unit has an exterior door opening onto a continuous balcony accessed by exterior stairs or, for first-floor units, at grade level or below grade; and Interior Entrance, in which buildings have a commonly accessed main entrance and interior-hallway access.

Subtype: Exterior Access Apartment Block

Common elements of exterior access apartment blocks include:

- Flat roof
- Rectangular or L-plan
- Three stories
- Elongated massing
- Exterior stairs and full-width balustrades

Subtype: Interior Access Apartment Block

Common elements of interior access apartment blocks include:

- Flat roof
- Rectangular plan
- Three or more stories
- Elongated massing
- Symmetrical facade
- Contrasting spandrel materials

Garden Court Apartment Form

Virginia Village contains a number of examples of rowhouse/townhome complexes. Most of these were constructed recently, from the mid-1980s to as late as 2004. A few, however, date to the post-World War II period. These Garden Court form apartment complexes exhibit Ranch style formal elements such as hipped roofs and picture windows. Garden Court apartments are located in zones that bridge apartment complex areas and single-family areas, and whether or not it was the builder's intent, these work to smooth the transition from houses to apartments in the neighborhood. Garden Courts were most often constructed in pairs or mirrored groups of four to six buildings, with unit entrances facing an identical building across a central area. Each building generally has three to four individual units.

Garden Court apartments share the following features with single-family Ranch form houses:

- Low, horizontal orientation
- Low-pitched hipped or cross-hipped roofs
- Brick exterior cladding
- Tripartite windows with rowlock sills

High-Rise Apartment Building Form

One collection of five high-rise apartment buildings is located in Virginia Village. Constructed from 1968 to 1974, these are towering, ten-story brick buildings with projecting balconies. Because these are the only residential high-rise buildings in Virginia Village, they are not presented here as a building type; however, these buildings are interesting not only because they are good examples of late-modern residential apartment architecture, but also because they were designed by one of the more notable apartment designers in the Denver metro area, Roland Wilson.

Architectural Styles and Forms: Commercial, Public, and Institutional

Buildings located in the commercial zones of Virginia Village run a wide gamut of types, and in most cases no distinguishable architectural style has been applied. On S. Colorado Boulevard, much of the commercial construction is less than thirty years of age and includes “big box” stores and fast-food chain restaurants as well as gas station-convenience stores and one hotel.

In many cases, the buildings that are over thirty years old have been heavily modified and carry little historic integrity. Many others are unique and do not fall into recognized type categories. Those buildings that are over thirty years old, have integrity, and can be categorized generally fall within the following type categories.

Strip Mall Form

Strip malls are found in all commercial nodes and corridors of Virginia Village. This building type was developed to meet the needs of the consumers in the post-World War II suburbs, who preferred the ease of shopping where parking was easy and options were many. These are usually rectangular or L-plan in footprint and are a single story in height. The storefronts tend to be regularly spaced and elaborations in building materials and signage usually have thematic consistency across storefronts.

Common characteristics of strip malls include:

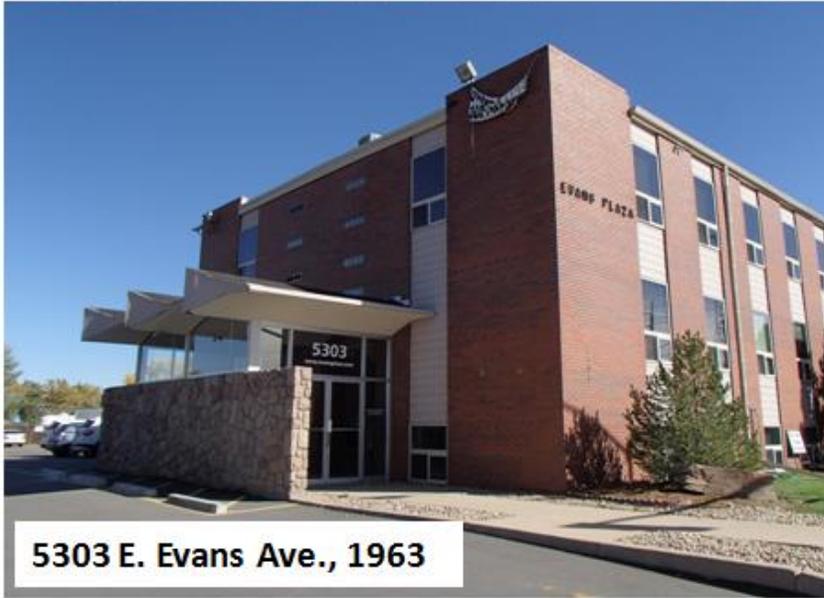

- Rectangular or L-shaped plan
- Single story in height
- Regularly spaced storefronts, often with similar or consistent design theme
- Continuous awning or roof canopy stretches across the public face of the building

Commercial/Industrial Block Form

The Commercial/Industrial Block form encompasses a wide range of fairly non-descript utilitarian buildings found throughout the Virginia Village neighborhood. Included in this category are light industrial buildings as well as those that would be classified as office buildings. Colonnade or canopy entrances and projecting vestibules are often present on Commercial/Industrial Block buildings that house offices. Commercial/Industrial Block form buildings are found primarily in the neighborhood's commercial zones along E. Evans Avenue and S. Colorado Boulevard, as well as along the busier streets internal to the neighborhood such as S. Holly Street.

2065 S. Hudson St., 1958

5303 E. Evans Ave., 1963

Common elements of Commercial/ Industrial Block buildings include:

- Flat roof
- Utilitarian appearance
- Rectangular or L-plan
- Loading bay(s)
- Large windows for daylighting, but not for display

Service Bay Business Form

Usually constructed for servicing automobiles, the high incidence of this building type is a testament to Virginia Village’s history as an automobile suburb. Sometimes these are former gas stations that no longer have pumps in place. These are found on E. Evans Avenue and also on S. Holly Street.

Common characteristics of Service Bay Business buildings include:

- Utilitarian appearance
- One or more service bays with vehicular entrances and roll-up doors
- Office or public space is small in relation to service bay space
- Parking areas surround building

Properties Evaluated for Significance

Forty-nine buildings or complexes of buildings contained within the Virginia Village boundary were recommended for documentation at the Enhanced level. In most cases this was because field observations supported the possibility that the building was architecturally significant. In a few cases, surveyors were informed in the field that a building might have potential historical or cultural significance.

The following table lists the buildings flagged for survey at the Enhanced level, and the area of potential significance identified for each.

Individual Properties with Special Significance or Interest

Four buildings identified for Enhanced level survey were determined to have special significance or interest.

- 4380 E. Louisiana Street (1955, demolished)

The CDOT headquarters building at 4301 E. Arkansas Street was designed by noted Denver architect Temple Hoyne Buell and constructed in 1955. This building was documented in the field but was demolished in 2018.

- 1902 S. Oneida Street (1892)

The wood frame I-House is an important late-nineteenth century domestic architectural form, and few examples remain in Denver. This farmhouse is the sole remaining I-House in Virginia Village. It sits on the southern boundary of Section 20, and was likely a farmhouse for a homestead located in that section.

- 4801 E. Florida Avenue (1918)

The Christian Noe dairy farm once occupied the area now known as Krisana Park. This is a large Craftsman dwelling with good integrity.

- 4740 E. Mississippi Avenue (1918)

Constructed in 1918, this farmstead has been in the same family since the 1930s. The collection of buildings includes a barn (pictured), two dwellings, and other outbuildings. The privy building is still present but, according to the owner, has been moved several times.

Areas of Special Significance or Interest

An area of significance, for the purposes of the Discover Denver project, is defined as a concentration of historic properties that are of special interest because of the stories they tell as a group. To understand what areas of significance exist in Virginia Village, it is useful to explore two underlying concepts that must be addressed when areas of significance are identified: the first is the period of time that the area attained significance, and the second is the ability of an area to tell its story.

When was significance attained?

In order to contribute to a historic area or neighborhood, a building must have been constructed within the date range for “important events, activities, persons, cultural groups, and land uses” that define when that area became important.⁵⁴ Although Virginia Village contains some properties that date to the decades before World War II, when it was an area of small farms and greenhouses, these are rare and are scattered across the neighborhood. While they may be individually significant, they do not exist in concentrations that could support an area of significance. The vast majority of buildings in Virginia Village are single-family homes dating to the post-World War II period, which is generally understood to be from 1946 to 1969.

Is the area able to tell its story?

The Secretary of Interior Standards for Archaeology and Historic Preservation defines historic physical integrity as the ability of a property to convey its significance. It further identifies seven aspects of integrity: location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association.⁵⁵ To be able to convey its history, an area must contain buildings for which these elements, as applicable, are intact enough that passersby may understand that they are in a historically important place.

Geographic boundaries for areas of significance are also important to consider. Because historic suburbs are usually identified by the subdivision boundaries as they were defined during the period of significance, these areas must sufficiently retain the spatial organization, physical components, aspects of design, and historical associations that they acquired when they were first created.⁵⁶ For Virginia Village, which has a high level of overall historic integrity with little infill and most original house designs still very legible, numerous areas of significance could potentially be defined within the boundaries of their respective subdivisions—in fact, few subdivisions in the neighborhood could be understood to not carry potential significance. Although some subdivisions contain custom homes, most subdivisions have their own “family” of tract house patterns. The map on the following page shows the boundaries of the many subdivisions in the neighborhood, as well as a few examples of the hundreds of tract or custom homes that could be understood to contribute to the significance of the subdivisions in which they are located.

Common Alterations

Although today, these houses have varying levels of historic integrity, the majority still easily convey their histories as suburban homes constructed in the 1950s or 1960s. Most houses have alterations that were identified as “minor” by Discover Denver surveyors because, although they occurred after the post-World War II period, they are extremely common and do not appear to interfere with integrity of feeling or design. Replacement of steel or aluminum windows with vinyl was found to be very common, although window size is rarely altered. Siding replacement is also widespread, with original wood siding often covered with vinyl and aluminum horizontal siding and in some cases asbestos shingle siding. Another alteration that appears to be very common in Virginia Village is the conversion of original street-facing single-car garages to living space. Additions to the rears of houses were sometimes observed, but their frequency is undetermined since in most cases these were not observable (most of the post-World War II subdivisions did not include alleys and additions were not visible from the street). Second-story additions were very rare, a fact that is likely attributable to the larger lot sizes found in Virginia Village as compared to older neighborhoods in which smaller lots leave nowhere to go but up.

The Multiple Property Documentation Form for Post-World War II subdivisions in the Metro Denver area, Historic Residential Subdivisions of Denver, 1940-1965, advocates for a generous approach to integrity considerations for these properties:

Common alterations to properties in postwar subdivisions include changes to features of the porch, replacement of doors and windows within the original openings, replacement of roofing tiles, covering of original siding, rear additions, and addition or alteration of landscape features. These types of alterations generally do not diminish the historic physical integrity of the resource. Alterations that change the height, setback, or massing are more significant, as are the removal of character defining features, changes to the roofline, or additions incompatible in scale to the original construction. The combined impact of several less dramatic alterations after the period of significance may also negatively impact integrity (emphasis added).

Replacing or enclosure of a carport to gain a garage or its conversion into living space would not render the dwelling noncontributing if executed in a compatible manner. Examples of incompatible changes include lateral expansion of the number of bays in the carport or extension of the carport from the house toward the street. For enclosures, the use of incompatible wall materials, windows at odds with the type and scale used elsewhere on the house, or the addition of a doorway in the former garage door opening represent changes that might impact integrity. By the same reasoning, the conversion of a garage into living space would not necessarily render a house noncontributing. However, expansion of a garage laterally or toward the street would negatively impact the historic physical integrity of a dwelling.⁵⁷

Of the many areas of potential significance that lie in Virginia Village, a few stand out as having special significance for the distinctive architectural types that they contain. These are:

The Fine Arts Quarter Apartment Complex by Roland Wilson

This complex of five high-rise apartment towers is located on S. Birch between E. Mexico and E. Iowa and was designed and built from 1968 to 1974 by Roland Wilson, one of the leading mid-twentieth-century multi-family residential architects in the metro-Denver area. Wilson’s “signature move” was the white balcony panel, and other innovations he brought to apartment housing in Denver include underground parking and indoor swimming pools. These buildings are: 4280 E. Iowa Avenue (Van Dyke apartments); 4295 E. Mexico Avenue (De Medici apartments); 4225 E. Mexico Avenue (Monmartre apartments); 1625 S. Birch Street (the Korsakov and Da Vinci apartments). Integrity is outstanding in all buildings, with the possible exception of the pool/community house at 1625 S. Birch Street, which may postdate construction of the apartments.

The location of the Fine Arts Quarter apartment buildings.

Krisana Park

One of the most notable Contemporary (aka “Mid-Century Modern”) subdivisions in the Denver Metro area, the wide majority of the homes in Krisana Park were constructed in 1954 and 1955 by the developers H. B. and Brad Wolff. Closely based on the nationally famous Eichler homes in California, these houses feature architectural elements that clearly tie them to the Contemporary style, such as post and beam construction, low-pitched roofs with deep eaves, privacy-reinforcing slot and clerestory windows on the front façade, and side-facing carports. Most houses have some degree of alteration (the house in the lower photo has had a carport converted to living space), but residents are in general very conscious and appreciative of the design aesthetic of their neighborhood—in 2009, Krisana Park received the Mayor’s Design Award. The Krisana Park neighborhood has good integrity and most of the houses easily communicate their history as innovative examples of this architectural style. The Krisana Park neighborhood is currently protected by a conservation overlay.

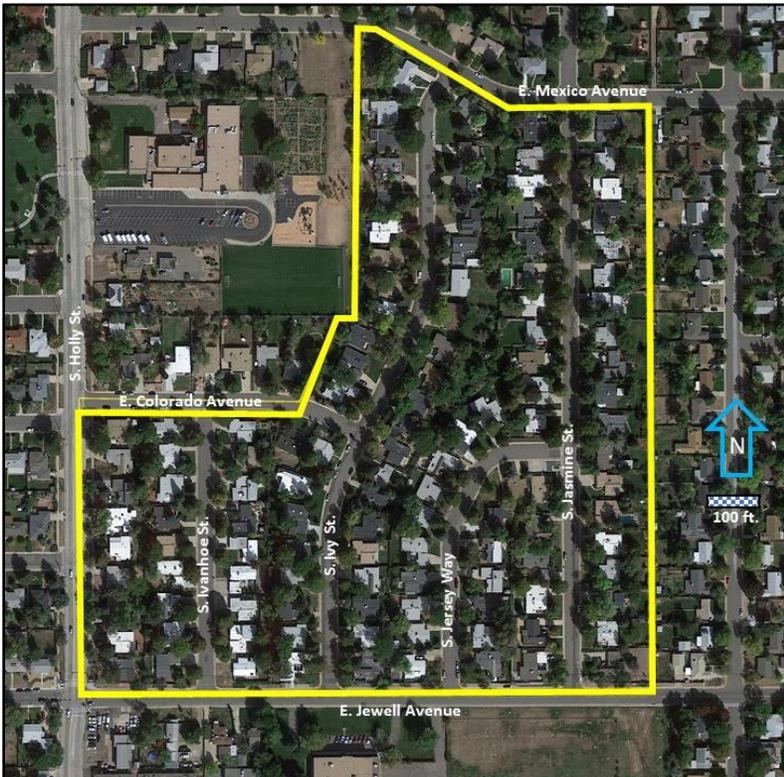

Krisana Park boundaries.

Lynwood Filing No. 1

This subdivision of contemporary homes was constructed in 1956-1958. These are architecturally similar to the homes in the Krisana Park subdivision, with low-pitched gable roofs and recessed garages, and were also built by H. B. and Brad Wolff. Some notable style differences are present, however, including a much larger representation of the A-Frame form than that found in Krisana Park. Integrity varies but is generally good, and window and siding replacements are common.

The boundary of Lynwood Filing No. 1

It is noteworthy that a higher level of integrity is contained within the collections of contemporary style houses in Krisana Park and Lynwood Filing 1, and major alterations are usually recent. This may be because the original owners of these houses were more likely to select them based on aesthetic criteria and were less inclined to set about making changes immediately, as the owners of the more common Ranch-style tract homes were often inclined to do. Lynwood Filings 4 through 6 were constructed a few years after most of the Ranch-style tract homes and were larger, which may be the reason these homes retain a somewhat higher level of integrity, with few visible additions.

Lynwood Filings No. 4, 5, and 6

Located south of Jewell and east of Monaco, these are a collection of 1960s homes constructed in archetypal post-World War II suburban styles, including Cape Cod, styled Ranch, Split-Level and Two-Story Colonial Revival. Integrity is generally good, with window and siding replacement a common occurrence.

Conclusion

Virginia Village contains one of the largest concentrations of post-World War II single-family housing in the metro Denver area. For post-war tract home developments, the landscape of repetition—long lines of identical rooftops and nearly indistinguishable houses—is a key character defining feature, even though this same feature was heavily derided when the homes were first built (see Malvina Reynolds’ popular song from the 1950s, “Little Boxes”) and has continued to be in subsequent generations.

Whether any of Virginia Village’s properties or subdivisions are designated or recognized at some future point in time is up to the people who own them and/or interact with them on a daily basis. But even if this never happens, the value of Discover Denver’s survey of Virginia Village is immeasurable. The friendly interaction between the dedicated project volunteers and the neighborhood’s residents, nearly all of whom were delighted that their homes and blocks were receiving this attention, helped raise awareness of the cultural significance of all of Denver’s landscapes, including those that do not immediately come to mind when we think about historic preservation. The field crew members often explained that this record was as much for future generations as it is for the people who live in Virginia Village today. As a culture, Americans are keenly interested in our past. Many generations hence, the descendants of the residents of Virginia Village and all of Denver will be able to understand how important this landscape of post-World War II housing was to Denver and to their families.

8. SURVEY LOG

Evaluations made as a part of this survey project are intended to assist city staff, property owners, and other interested parties with understanding a property’s potential significance. These evaluations may be revised in the future should additional information be discovered, or if the property no longer retains its historic physical integrity.

A determination of significance or eligibility does not formally designate a resource as a historic landmark or put any restrictions on it. Historic designation would require a significant level of community support and the successful completion of a rigorous public process.

Evaluation Code	Definition
Local – Individual Significance Codes
DEMOLISHED	Resource has been demolished.
E	City staff has determined that the resource has architectural, historical, or cultural significance.
L30	Resource is less than thirty years of age and was not evaluated for potential significance.
LANDMARK	Resource is a designated Denver Landmark.
ND	More data is needed to determine if this property has architectural, historical, or cultural significance.
NE	Resource no longer retains its physical integrity.
PE	Resource has potential architectural, historical, or cultural significance.
Local – District Significance Codes
DEMOLISHED	Resource has been demolished.
L30	Resource is less than thirty years of age and was not evaluated for potential significance.
NPD	Resource is not located in an area of special significance or interest.
C	Resource retains its physical integrity and would contribute to an area of special significance or interest.
NC	Resource has lost its physical integrity and would not contribute to an area of special significance or interest.
NR/SR – Individual Significance Codes
DEMOLISHED	Resource has been demolished.
L30	Resource is less than thirty years of age and was not evaluated for potential significance.
ND	More data is needed to evaluate this property’s eligibility for listing in the National Register.
NR-NE	Resource lacks the significance required for listing in the National Register.
NR-E (Criteria)	Resource has sufficient significance for listing in the National Register under the noted criteria.
NR-LISTED	Resource is listed in the National Register of Historic Places.
SR-E	Resource has sufficient significance for listing in the State Register under the noted

(Criteria)	criteria.
NR/SR – District Significance Codes
DEMOLISHED	Resource has been demolished.
L30	Resource is less than thirty years of age and was not evaluated for potential significance.
NPD	Resource is not located in an area of special significance or interest.
C	Resource retains its physical integrity and would contribute to an area of special significance or interest.
NC	Resource has lost its physical integrity and would not contribute to an area of special significance or interest.
